LANSING HIGH SCHOOL

THE BUILDING FROM A NEW ANGLE

It is the same old remodeled building, designed to accommodate some six hundred pupils. For three years its capacity has been overtaxed. Especially was it so this year, for nine hundred pupils managed to crowd themselves through the daily sessions. A change is now under way in the form of an addition to house the science departments. Will this meet the needs of Lansing's growth? Will we not, in a few years, see history repeated? People of Lansing,—ask yourselves this question and consider it wisely.

DEDICATION

To Mr. Harry E. Gardner, teacher and friend; who has not only guided us through the mysteries of geometry and "trig," but has also taught us the value of character; who, with both fairness and sincerity, has pointed out our faults and praised our virtues; who has been no small factor in preparing us to meet the problems of life, we, the Class of Nineteen Seventeen, sincerely dedicate this Oracle.

BOARD OF EDUCATION

Standing—Mr. Breisch, Mr. Force, Mr. Briggs, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Main, Dr. Holm, Mr. Wright, Mr. Cooper.

Seated—Mr. Hardy, Mrs. Redfern, Mr. Page, Mr. Morse, Mr. Sexton, Mr. Nichols, Miss Hunter, Mr. Holmes, Mr. Wolcott, Mr. Chapin.

On the second and fourth Mondays of each month these representative citizens assemble in regular session. They also have special meetings at necessary times. Each person serves on one or more of the various committees which require much of their time in strenuous, deliberate work to safely guide the destinies of the ever increasing public school system of the City of Lansing. But not one cent do they receive for their services. They deserve the appreciation of every citizen of Lansing, and the Oracle, in behalf of the High School, extends sincere gratitude to the Board of Education.

A FAREWELL TO THE SENIORS

Dear Seniors:

The time has come when the Lansing High School must bid farewell to the class of '17, and a hard task it is. We of the Junior Class especially regret the parting, since for three years you have been the class just ahead of us—into whose footsteps we know that we must follow. Whatever feeling of ill-will may have existed in our Freshman year has been quite forgotten in the friendships since formed. We shall miss your cheery good fellowship and strong school spirit, and our good wishes will follow you, as you leave for your colleges and universities, and go out into the world of action. We know you will always be loyal to your Alma Mater, and keep a warm place in your hearts for the "Red and White."

May success follow your every undertaking, and a full measure of happiness be yours.

CLASS OF 1918

One fair September morning, of the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred fourteen, found the Freshman assembly rooms thronged with a new people. They wore upon their faces the look of strangers in a strange land. But as the days and weeks passed by that look disappeared. If you were to look into the faces of the well poised, enthusiastic Juniors of today, you would scarcely recognize those self same Freshmen of three years ago.

The class of 1918 was launched upon its eventful career under the guidance of Scott Baker. During this, their Freshman year, they captured the baseball championship, and the hearts of the Sophomores were filled with jealous wrath. The following year they chose Ernest Burhans as their leader. It was in this year that they gave a Sophomore feed. Their Junior president is Herbert Dunphy. The Junior Hop of this year was remarkably successful. The Junior "Ex.," at which they presented "The Moon Maid," by Miss Derby, demonstrated conclusively that they are an unusually talented class.

Colors—Purple and Gold.

Hail to the Sophomores! We will not stop to give them any advice, for we have reason to believe that it would not be acceptable. It has been said that you can always tell a Sophomore, but you cannot tell him much. But, in spite of the fact that they are inclined to be a bit egotistical, the Sophomores of this year are on the whole a fine class. They have plenty of class spirit and enthusiasm. They are interested in all class activities and are always "right there with the goods."

The class of 1919 elected as its first president, Cordon Radford. During his administration it distinguished itself by winning the outdoor track pennant. In the election of 1916 the Sophomores chose Wilmot Shaw president. They are looking forward to next year with its numerous class activities, and are planning to make the class of 1919 one of the best ever. May they ever prosper in all their undertakings!

Colors—Blue and Gold.

Motto—"Onward and Upward."

CLASS OF 1920

It was in March, 1914 that the following item appeared in the Zodiac:

"Poor Freshies!

They grow smaller and smaller every year. What will the Class of '20 be?"

It was in September, 1916 that we learned the answer, for they, the Class of '20, came into existence. Some of its members are small, even beyond expectation. In fact many of them might easily pass for fifth graders. But they are growing.

Moreover what they lack in size they make up in enthusiasm. Anyone who has attended some of the interclass games knows that they have "pep." No one doubts for a moment that they are alive.

This year's Freshman Class is the largest that has ever entered Lansing High School. It boasts an enrollment of 375. The Class of 1920 has chosen Lee Weston to guide its destinies through its first year. Thus far it has been a splendid class. May its shadow never grow less!

Colors—Purple and White.

Motto—Esse quam videii—To be rather then to seem to be.

EDITORIAL

Competition is what makes the world go. Since the first publication of the Oracle in '92, this seems to have been the keynote to its success. Every class has striven to produce the best yet published. The Oracle Board of 1917 has spent tireless effort that this, the twenty-sixth edition, might reach and even excel the standards of previous annuals, and be truly representative of the history of the graduating class and of the activities in Lansing High School for the past year. If we have accomplished this, we feel that we have reason indeed to be proud of our achievement. Herewith we submit for your critical inspection, kind reader, the 1917 Oracle.

How often has it been said that Lansing High School publishes one of the best annuals of any high school in the state! You ask the reason? It is this. The whole school is always behind the Oracle each year. The 1917 Oracle board has found this especially true and wishes to express its appreciation for this support. The class feels deeply indebted to Miss Crilly who, as faculty critic, has given her profitable advice and assistance, and to Mr. Gardner who has kept a watchful, experienced eye on the financial and business side of the preparation of the Oracle. To the judges of the literary contests, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Boone Gross, Miss Belle Maniates, Mrs. E. Jennie McNeal, Mrs. Stowell Stebbins and Rev. H. H. Pitzer, and to those of the art contests, Mrs. James M. Collins, Mr. Leo Porter and Mr. Douglas Severance do we give our grateful thanks for their generous contribution of time and judgment.

One moment please! Did you ever stop to realize that you paid only seventy-five cents for this Oracle, which cost one dollar to publish? Who could make this possible but those who advertise in these pages. Show that you appreciate it the next time you need some article these people offer. They support us; now don't you think you owe them something?

This year marked the appearance of old faces in new places. Mr. Sexton is Superintendent of the city schools and Mr. Brown, for eight years instructor in Physics here, is in Mr. Sexton's former position, as Principal of the High School. We, who knew Mr. Sexton, were indeed sorry to miss his friendly greetings to all, but are sure he deserved this advancement, and wish him success. Mr. Brown's promotion came as a joy to some and a regret to others. The Class of 1917 regretted it, as the related experiences of our predecessors, in his physics classes, gave us a desire to taste of his philosophy. However, we all feel that he will have wider influence and more extended usefulness in his new position, and we give him the loyal support due our Principal.

The Senior Class has struggled hopefully toward membership in the Alumni Association, which now has 1656 members excluding the class of 1917. That it is an active and useful organization is shown by its many successful undertakings. At the time when the gymnasium was being discussed, this association sent out cards urging its members to boost and vote for the gym, and the addition to the science building. There is no doubt that the gym would have been lost without their aid.

The College Benefit Club was organized among the members of the Alumni, and although it took some time to get it into working order, it is now able to give aid to a great many graduates in attaining a college education. At the present time, twelve loans have been made and the capital now is $910.

The Alumni Association grows yearly, not only in numbers but in initiative and activity, and its power for good in the High School and the city is almost inestimable. Its officers for the past year were:

President.....Eugene Hammond
Vice-Presidents.....Mrs. Van Keuren
Zelin Goodell
Juliette Bartholomew
Treasurer.....Edward Hacker
Corresponding Secretary.....Pauline Phillips
Secretary and Treasurer of Loan Fund.....Etta R. Wilbur

DAVID CRAY'S AWAKENING

(Prize Story.)

Ada Fuller, '18.

A Kentucky sunrise is as indescribable as the feeling it creates. A sense of the mysterious, mingled with the beauty of the colorful mists, rising from the valleys at the call of the sun, awakens within the beholder a desire to be worthy of such surroundings. The majestic splendor of the mountains carries with it the impression of a will, strong enough to do and dare. Inspiration and all that is good and holy gleam from hill and valley.

So thought the young mountaineer that morning, as he gazed upon the glory of the rising sun. Twenty-three years of splendid manhood, he stood in the mountain path, drinking in the mystery of the new day. Tall, broad shouldered, and handsome, after a rugged fashion, he stood there, his keen grey eyes searching the scene before him, as though looking for some intangible object. David Cray had inherited the magnificent strength of his father, together with the still which he operated in a cave upon the top of Muldraugh Gap. There, safe from revenue officers and chance tourists, he carried on the business which his father and his father's father, sturdy mountaineers all, had found profitable in the district of Cogswell Corners and Muldraugh Gap.

David's intercourse with the outer world, that big mass of humanity existing beyond Cogswell Corners and over Bear Range, had been meager indeed. To him there had been no harm in operating that secret still upon the mountain top. It was his profession, no more unworthy than that of a doctor, a sheriff, or a keeper of a general store. He could remember no other home than the little cabin by the cave. In that, after his brother had departed to seek his fortune over the mountain, and after the death of the father and mother, he had lived alone. His father had shown him the stumps upon which to place the jugs of whiskey on his way to the Corners, and how to collect the money which replaced them on his return. For six years he had carried on that work, kept the cabin clean, much cleaner than before he had been left alone, and taught himself from a couple of books left, in return for hospitality, by a traveler.

These books had awakened in David a thirst for knowledge and literature. So after six years of persevering, although handicapped by his small supply of attainable books, he knew more of "book-larnin" that the oldest inhabitant of Cogswell Corners would ever know, and was the eighth wonder of the world to the mountain side peoples.

This comprehension of things beyond his daily and habitual ken, and another still greater factor, were beginning to arouse in him a doubt regarding his operation of the still. He became uneasy and pondered long upon the question. Was this business of his, as open and above board as it might be? If whiskey stills were lawful, why the revenue officers, and the secret selling? Maybe after all, in his ignorance, he had been committing an unlawful deed. What seemed best and right? He could not decide.

The other great force, which had turned his attention to the weighty question, was the coming of the railroad and the young engineer in charge. There was also the engineer's sister, who had accompanied her brother to the mountains of Kentucky, to escape the heat of an extraordinarily warm season.

Young Oakly, a jolly fellow of the usual college bred type, had been deeply impressed by the mountaineer and since their first meeting, had sought David's companionship whenever possible. The simple hospitality, the apparent, but reserved eagerness for knowledge, and the willingness to be of service, had drawn Oakly to David's cabin for many an evening of quiet enjoyment. Occasionally his sister would come with him, and there sprang up between the three a sort of comradeship, David providing tales of the mountains and the mountaineers, the two easterners supplying David's thirst for learning with accounts of events in the world across the mountains.

All these things were crowding into David's mind as he stood there watching the sun rise that morning. With a sigh he glanced once more at the beauty of it all, turned and made his way to the white-washed cabin in the clearing.

It was a one-roomed dwelling, spotlessly clean. The plaster walls were adorned with rifles and skins, mingled with an occasional picture of a crudely built boat, automobile or railway, torn from some ancient magazine. There was no furniture in the cabin which was not absolutely needed except, curiously enough, a wicker rocker, an importation from the general store at the Corners after the arrival of Marian Oakly in the mountains.

David dropped wearily upon the door-step. The doubts and questions would all crowd into his mind again, no matter how hard he thought of other things. He recalled Norman Oakly's surprised ejaculation when David told him of the still in the cave. Again he remembered how he had hedged when Marian questioned him as to how he spent his time. He had never been ashamed of his occupation before. Norman had offered him a place on his railroad gang. David had refused because the still demanded much of his time. Why had Norman been so eager to change David's occupation? Something must be wrong with it. Oakly with his knowledge of the world ought to know. He would ask him at once.

David got up, closed the cabin door, took a look at the stuff stewing in the cave and went down the mountain path. A few minutes' walk brought him to the place where the construction gang was in operation.

Oakly saw him as he approached. Pausing a moment to speak to his foreman, he gave a few directions and then started toward him. David was watching the gang, but not really seeing it, so intent was he upon his own thoughts.

"Hello Cray," was Oakly's salutation as he scrambled up a pile of ties to where David stood. "To what shall I attribute this early visit of 'The Knight of the Hills'?" This was Marian's name for the young mountaineer. Oakly glanced at the newcomer. "Trouble?" he added tersely.

"Have you a moment to spare?" as briskly came the response. "I have a question I want settled."

"Sure thing. Two moments if you need 'em." Oakly dropped down upon a convenient pile of ties and motioned his companion to do the same. "Anything I can do?"

"I want to know," said David, with simple directness, "What's wrong with running a still."

Oakly showed no surprise at the query. He had been expecting it. But he wished his sister were there to explain to this clear-eyed young mountaineer, with her gentle tact and sympathy.

"Well," he said finally, "Its this way." Then he hesitated. Could he tell him the plain facts without hurting his feelings or impairing their friendship?

David looked up quickly. Hesitation was not Oakly's usual method of conversing.

"It isn't lawful is it?" He strove to help his friend with his disagreeable task. "I have figured out that much myself, I guess. Please don't be afraid of my feelings. I can stand anything but this uncertainty."

Oakly's brown eyes met the troubled grey ones. Then he explained. When he had finished he rose and held out his hand.

"I know you'll make good elsewhere, now that you know," he said convincingly. "You're that kind. Don't take it to heart, Dave, just start all over."

"Thanks," David rose also and took the extended hand, "I can try it at least."

"And remember Dave, we are always for you, my sister and I. Marian thinks a lot of you. This still business has troubled her a heap. She'll be the first to congratulate you. She's strong for you, David, old man."

David's hand gripped Oakly's arm. "If your sister cares what becomes of me, a poor untaught mountaineer, I can accomplish anything." He turned and went up the mountain path, head high, determination written large upon his face.

When he reached the clearing he went straight to the still in the cave. A large copper vessel, set over a fire, stood in the center of the small cave-like room. An iron pipe conducted the vapor from the vessel to the worm, thence to the cooler, where it was condensed. David set to work to put out the fire under the great copper kettle. This done, he went to the cabin to wait until the iron and copper became cool enough to handle.

During the morning an idea occurred to him. Why not make a celebration of his departure from his present mode of employment? He decided to have the Oaklys witness the destroying of his distillery. He set off down the mountain again, this time with a lighter step and happier heart.

Oakly was delighted and answered for his sister. They would be there as soon as the men quit work.

It was getting dusk when David's guests appeared. He provided them with torches and invited them to the cave to witness the destruction of the still.

Marian's brown eyes sparkled with excitement as she glanced around the cave, and watched her brother and David prepare for the devastation of the time-worn apparatus.

Together the two men seized the great kettle and dragged it out of the cave. Returning, Dave grasped the iron pipe and attempted to jerk it from its position in the rugged wall. Down fell a great quantity of gravel and then the side wall caved in. Luckily, Marian and her brother were near the entrance, and David made a quick leap backward. They waited to see if any more would fall and then David advanced to unearth the pipe from the debris. He started back with an exclamation. Oakly hurried to him.

In his hand David held a good-sized chunk of coal. Oakly stooped and examined the pile and walls carefully. Then he turned to the bewildered David.

"Man, alive, but you've struck it rich," he gasped delightedly." "Coal, real coal, do you realize it? You've got a fortune right here in this little old cave."

David stumbled to his feet and gazed incredulously first at Marian then at her brother.

"Do you mean this is a coal mine?" he asked in a dazed sort of way.

"Surest thing you know. Shake, David, my friend. I am tickled to death to be the first one to congratulate you."

Marian said nothing, but she came to him with shining eyes and outstretched hands. David took them and gazed longingly at her.

"You deserve it, 'Knight of the Hills;" she said joyously. "You deserve it, every bit."

The three returned to the cabin and Norman began to talk endlessly of miners, drills, shafts and what not. David and Marian were interested for a short time, but finally their interest and attention waned. David ceased trying to figure out how this miraculous good fortune had come to him and sat looking at Marian. At last Oakly discovered that he was receiving scant attention and he arose from his chair. With a mockingly ceremonious bow, he said;

"I am very glad to see with what serious attention my valuable suggestions have been received. I will now take my departure, until my beloved sister and esteemed friend have sufficiently recovered from the shock just received, to join me, upon yon woodland balcony." So saying he disappeared into the outer darkness.

Marian turned to David with a happy laugh and David—Gentle Reader, let us also join the brother upon yon woodland balcony and leave the young mountaineer with his heart's desire.

PRIZE ESSAY

Murray Kutt.

The writer is not issuing this paper with the specific point in view of answering to any home mission call, nor is he filled with what might be termed a recognition of a Divine call, but he has a few ideas of his own which he is willing and anxious to express.

In a recent issue of the "Ladies Home Journal" there appears a very pleasing, and not less amusing article, in which some astonishing things are said and some singular points brought out.

It's a fact as serious as solemn, that a horse usually learns his gait when a colt, and he does not often put in any fancy frills after he has stumbled around awhile in that way. Likewise, religion is acquired when a fellow is young and it is hard for him to change it, but it is a big slam on the past civilization to admit that religion has come up without considering the different plans of worship. If Moses worshipped at the same shrine that Adam had attended, and Paul and our Pilgrim fathers bagged their trousers before the same altar, then some historical facts of importance have been omitted, and some person interested from the unscientific point of view would confer a favor upon the perverse and progressive generation by digging up the pie plates that have that particular information gouged out on them.

It is true that God could have made man out of the ground as well as out of a monkey, and evidence sometimes points to the former view for some men are pretty dirty yet, but notwithstanding that, it is easy to make a monkey of oneself, showing reversion to an ancestral type.

To understand a law, one must live in it, and it is hard to understand evolution if you don't at some time or other evolve to some extent. To say that the law is accepted by a small minority of the thinking people of today is a pretentious, and assuming statement, not to say ungenerous.

Without the law of evolution, we must suppose that God made all the present types, but in the face of that, if he did make man and all of the rest, he left it to Burbank to make the White Blackberry.

Evolution occurs chiefly through the formation of habits. "Get the Habit" is the motto that should be posted on every hat in the country. It's what lands fellows in Congress and the Penitentiary, saying nothing about school teaching jobs and the Insane Asylum. Training is what counts. Habit can be made a fellow's best friend if he is willing. It can take him to purgatory or heaven. But where he ends up depends on whether he puts a half-hitch around the nose of habit or whether he lets it lead him meekly to the slaughter. Nobody ever landed in the hot place who started out with that particular point of view worked out in James' "Talks to Teachers," guide.

The habit of getting what you want is a good one to form, and it is well to look ahead. It is the going after it that makes the man. A fellow who has to dig is the one who gets the training. It isn't the number of lessons you get, it is the way of getting them that counts.

Usually the terrapins are the ones that pull the big jobs; the hares might get them all, but they don't.

It isn't the fact of being able to recite the rules of grammar, but it is the good habit of being able to use them every day. It is the habit that makes the man. His mind isn't a dump heap for all the rubbish of literature and history, but it is a switch board that helps him to put through the information without any collisions.

High School is where we form the most important habits that either make or break us in private life.

High School is a source of knowledge, but you can't gorge yourself with that same knowledge and then use the Literary Digest to any great advantage. The food of knowledge must be proportioned and assimilated to become a part of our intellectual bone and sinew, blood and muscle. Knowledge isn't to be poured in, it's to be poured on and some of it soaks in after some rubbing. High School is like a game of checkers in which it is not the playing but the learning how to play that has the advantage in it.

A man can't expect to go through High School and retain in his few cubic inches of plastic potash and gray matter the contents of a whole library. But what he does hold is the most important facts in a systematic arrangement, if he goes in to it with the point of view of getting all there is to get.

High School isn't a place for a person to come with a feeling like an empty jug before a Budweiser establishment, but we realize from past experience that it is a hard thing for a Freshman to feel otherwise.

Debating is a good thing, but impractical when you think of it. If a fellow could take two weeks off in practical life to prepare an argument for his wife when she comes at him with the broom—but even if he has studied it out beforehand, under the suddenness he forgets.

Debating is a modern form of training in the High School. It probably evolved from the old time form of arguments between teachers and students.

When it comes to debating, we can present the arguments.

In the commercial world Lansing is at an advantage, but placed as it is here, we can mix the contents of men's minds, and grease their vocabularies so that their opponents stand like dumb driven sheep before the blast.

Debating is good training. There are only a few fellows at the present writing who realize the value of High School training. They go to class and make a bluff, thinking they have got ahead of the professor. But where ignorance is bliss 'twould pay better to be wiser and more blissful. The professor does not care a rap. He puts down on his roll call an E or P, and goes to the treasurer to draw his salary. These fellows are fooling themselves. They look at High School as our Pilgrim fathers looked at life—a seat among the mighty and a golden harp beyond.

With this question of bluff comes the question of the human parasite. A human parasite is a fellow who disposes of his energy at a marked down sale and attempts to fatten upon his neighbor. But the waist band and the usefulness of such an individual is usually proportionate by inverse ratio.

True, some modern theorists hold that a man's business capacity is measured by his belt line but the fellows who develop their gastronomic functions at the cost of their external activities, fill a place in the physical realm, but not in the world of thought. The important part of life is not the mere existing, but the living. It takes "Git, Grit, and Gumption," to make the man. Go at it to win, like Grant who said, "I'll fight it out on this line if it takes all summer."

MEMORIES

(First Prize Poem)
Rena Schutt, '17.

It seems such a short time ago folks,
When we started to school the first day,
How happy we were with our reader!
How eager to learn the right way!

Remember our friend in the first grade,
The second, the third and the rest?
Why yes, we remember each one, folks,
And exactly which one we liked best.

How we envied all those in the tenth grade,
We thought they were wonderfully wise,
We would talk of them when we got home, folks,
And boast them clear up to the skies.

Then we reached the tenth grade ourselves folks,
We were never so happy we thought,
The Juniors were cheerful and jolly,
Played tricks, and tried not to be caught.

Then our gaze was turned toward the Seniors,
How we worshiped their dignified air,
How we watched them and copied their ways, folks,
A wishing we just could be there.

And now our last wish has been granted,
We are Seniors, yes Seniors at last,
We must leave the old school house for good, folks,
In which so many good times have been passed.

We must start on the journey of life, folks,
We must bid you farewell, L. H. S.,
Farewell to all teachers, all classes,
We wish you all future success.

MY SENIOR PICTURE

Miriam Carpenter.

"It must be done at 10:30 tomorrow," said the business manager, and he trembled—with good cause.

"Oh, I'm so excited," I replied in a stage whisper that could have been heard in the most remote corners of the senior room. "Will you—will you go with me?" He blushed.

"I—I think I have an engagement." He withdrew hastily, leaving me alone in my fright. I really could not blame him for he had overcome great difficulties in securing a setting for my senior picture, and still greater difficulties lay ahead. Who could tell what might happen?

I hadn't had my picture taken since I was a small girl. I remember the photographer who took it went out of business the next week, and committed suicide soon after. People said he was out of his mind, and had acted strangely for almost two weeks. Some were mean enough to openly connect these facts, but that was a kindly community in which I lived, so the matter was soon hushed up. Anyway I was too young to be held criminally liable.

Time passed on. I had no desire to mar the beauty and happiness of my friends' homes, and although my enemies may have desired my photograph to use against me, still I had none taken.

Then the edict had gone forth that the class of 1917 must have their pictures in the Oracle. From dread the business manager left me almost to the last, but making a heroic effort one second hour, he had delicately broached the subject to me. I realized immediately that he was trying to spare my feelings, so I told him I didn't believe I would have a picture.

"You must," he said, "if it is possible." I knew from his blush he hadn't meant to say that, although he honestly thought it. "I want people to say of me, 'He had every senior's picture in the Oracle.' I will pride myself on it."

I wondered afterward if he meant that. Every senior's picture in the Oracle—think of it! And proud of it! Rather he should have feared he would be jailed for it. But he might have meant it. It would sound well and be self-explaining as an epitaph on his tombstone. "He had every senior's picture in the Oracle."

Morbidly brooding on such thoughts, I accompanied him that afternoon. We canvassed every photographer in town, but none would undertake the job since my parents, being poor, could not guarantee for damages, and no one would go on my bond because the outcome was too certain. But in East Lansing we found an old gentleman, scientifically inclined, who had just patented a camera lens that would not warp. Moreover he had another scheme that not only further protected the operator, but transferred the shock by a long coil of wire to a machine which converted it into electricity. My hopes of wealth had risen in a moment. "Here," I thought, "I have found a profitable vocation," and a vision of the commercial value of an unlimited supply of electricity passed before my mind. And how easy—just to sit quietly and look natural. However, my plan was not to be a success. I was to pay them for allowing me to furnish the shock. Thus ever do my dreams of wealth suddenly fade.

But curiosity overcame my disappointment, so it was with a tense feeling of excitement that I entered the portals of the photographer's establishment. I was nearly knocked over by a classmate who came rushing out. For obvious reasons this girl too had availed herself of the remarkable invention. She seized me and thrust a proof before my eyes.

"Look at that," she cried, "Just as if my neck wasn't long enough without his making it look worse! I made him take another. He twisted my neck up so it would look shorter."

I would listen to no more for I was determined to have my encounter at 10:30.

The photographer's assistant was a stoop-shouldered young fellow, and quite bald I noticed. I wondered that he was not entirely so. He had a low forehead, expressive pale blue eyes, and drooping mouth. He indicated a chair and had me sit in a most uncomfortable position.

"Look pleasant," he commanded gruffly. I grinned.

"Not quite so pleasant as that," he admonished, and crawled into his machine from behind. I knew he must be murmuring some incantation, and I did not disturb him. Finally he came and took my head in his hands. I thought he meant to kiss me and I closed my eyes, but I was mistaken. He twisted my head about and enumerated to me all the bad points of my features. That made me angry. He was paid to make my picture look as nice as possible, not to tell me how homely I looked. I knew that already from being told so many times.

He threw a black cloth over the camera, I suppose for the same reason they put blinders on a horse, and led it toward me. I straightened up for I felt the critical moment was at hand. He got as far away as possible, and in the attitude of a runner about to start a race, pressed the bulb. I heard the thing snort and saw it stagger, and I realized that all was over. Our business manager had won his epitaph.

YOUTH

(First Prize Poem.)

Paul Watzel, '17.

Oh, what power is in youth,
Bubbling now with life and vim!
Who can guess or who can tell
Just what lies inside of him?
Who knows but that years from now
He'll be leader of the land,
Guiding with a steady hand?
Ah! Beneath unfurrowed brow
Wisdom may not yet be found,
Zeal and ardor though, abound,
And these virtues, nothing less,
May give hope for his success.

Youth, when manhood comes to him,
Should retain his active spirit,
For he has a treasure rare,
And no other can come near it.
In his life lies power unknown,
He is like the undammed stream,
He is like unharnessed steam;
When experience has shown
Him the ways of world and man,
And has trained him, as it can,
Then he'll win, for he'll have all
Of the virtues great and small.

Blame not then his inexperience,
For 'tis only but a lack
Of a virtue, not a fault.
(Would some elders had it back!)
Yes, the future is his glory;
Chide not then, when he in dream
May be lost in morrow's theme;
Time alone will tell the story:
For his dreaming is the waking
Of a great man in the making,
And will open to his view
Things that he will later do.

Youth, the whole world waits for thee,
Strength is thine if but thou use it;
Opportunity will come,
When it does, do not refuse it;
Glory, honor, fame and power
Ready are for thee to win;

Youth, make ready and start in,
Failure, if thou wait'st an hour.
Before thy confidence and vigor
Troubles shrink and hopes grow bigger:
Keep this spirit; if 'tis lost,
Thou could'st ill afford the cost.

DREAMS OF TOMORROW

(Third Prize Poem.)
Bessie M. Gregg, '17.

'Tis spring with its dreamy weather
As these thoughts come to me,
And I think of the path of the future,
Will it wide or narrow be?

The time draws near when we must part
From our school and comrades dear,
No more lectures nor any math
Will our teachers give us here.

Often times have we wandered
Through many a class room and hall,
Soon we will all be scattered
As winds scatter leaves in fall.

So 'tis farewell beloved places
With all their memories dear,
For we must travel onward
Striving from year to year.

And where'er we chance to be
Though the ocean lies between,
Our thoughts will always linger
With the Class of Seventeen.

And when we've reached life's eve
If God does so us bless,
We'll sit by the fireside and weave
Sweet memories of L. H. S.

'Tis spring, and with it cometh
The fresh and balmy air,
All the birds and bees and flowers
Shed a new life everywhere.

And so with the spring we step
Full of life, of hope, of zest,
Out into the world's vast theatre
To help make our nation the best.

WHERE OUR MONEY GOES.

The Frasoris Literary Society has spent this year in Europe. In spite of the prevailing state of war, an enjoyable year has been passed in the principal cities of Europe. Those places were selected to visit, which are noted particularly, either for their art collections, their historical significance, or their beauty.

Extemporaneous speeches and debates, held at intervals during the year, have been beneficial to the participants and enjoyable to the audience. Musical programs have given contrast to the usual literary numbers.

Social functions, although not of primary importance to a literary society, have not been neglected. A "feed" was held at Plummer Snyder's home, and it is planned to close the year with a rousing good time at the home of Miss Barnes, our patron.

The Senior members wish for Frasoris many more successful years.

The Euphronian literary society of the High School has the distinction of being the one society which admits girls only, to its membership. In September, the beginning of the school year, officers for the year were elected. The work of the society has been varied to meet the most interesting topics of the day. It seemed best to have a program of this kind rather than one general subject, similar to those carried out in previous years. Papers have been read on writers, opera stars and dramatists, and, for a diversion, a humorous debate was given. The prospects for a very successful and prosperous season next year are good, because of the enthusiasm and spirit which the new members, from the Freshman and Sophomore classes, have brought.

The House of Representatives, which a few years ago was considered to be on the "dead list," as compared to the other Literary Societies of the school, has, in the past two years, taken on a new life and reached a high standard. The framing of a new constitution and withdrawal from the American Federation of Houses, gave the House an entirely new start. The programs of this year were of particular interest because the subjects of debates were of national importance, such as, "Resolved: That the Chamberlian Bill should be adopted," and, "Resolved: That the President's plan of universal service should be adopted." In the latter part of February, a banquet was held which raised a great deal of enthusiasm, as was shown in the majority of the following meetings. Mr. Trachsel gave a short talk on the benefits derived from the House of Representatives and Dean Titus, who graduated in '16, gave his view of the benefits that he had obtained from the House. On the whole the House has had a very successful year and the prospects are bright for even greater success in the future.

The activities of the Adelphic during the past year were many. One of the first meetings was given over to the life and works of the late Jack London. Another program consisted of the life of Puccini and a review of his work, "La Boheme." The life of the highly esteemed James Whitcomb Riley was discussed later in the year; at the same meeting many of the Hoosier poet's works were read. During the middle of March somewhat of a novelty in literary society work was enjoyed by a visit to some of the National parks; Yellowstone and Grand Canyon were among those described by various members of the society. Socially the Adelphic has not been dead, for a sleigh-ride was held during the winter months and a picnic is being planned for the warmer weather. Altogether the society has had a prosperous year and the work has been enjoyed by all.

During the first semester of this year the program consisted mainly of reports on present day authors, and of musical numbers. For the second semester a definite plan of work has been carried out. The general topic taken up was "Men and Women of the Twentieth Century." Since a good knowledge of current history is almost indispensable to the High School student, the committee has endeavored to devote a few minutes of each meeting to the discussion of an interesting current event. The Cliosophic has been well and successfully represented in the inter-society debates this year, by Keith Betts and Howard Menhinick.

It is the belief of the Cliosophic Society that the better its members know each other, the better they can work together. With this end of better acquaintance in view, a feed was held early in the year at the home of Miss Pratt. Later Kenneth Eyestone was host at a feed in honor of the Cliosophic alumni.

The Cliosophic Literary Society has, on the whole, completed a successful and a profitable year. Its members feel that the time and effort they have put into the work has been worth while. They are ready to take it up next year, with still more enthusiasm and interest.

DEBATING

Never before in the history of the Lansing High School, has more enthusiasm been shown in debating, than this year. For the first time, three teams represented our school, one being composed entirely of girls. A very exciting series of elimination contests in the fall term, resulted in the following selection of debators: Mary Burwell, Helen Weld, Lillian Treadwell, Plummer Snyder, Paul Watzel, John Hermann, Victor Whittemore, Lewis Van Auken, and Paul Mixter.

The question of this year's debate was, "Resolved: That the government should own and operate all interstate railways, both steam and electric." The use of several faculty advisors has certainly been proven in the last few years to be the only efficient system of training.

January 18 was the date of the first debate. The girls team, the first in the history of the school, went to Muskegon, where it scored a victory over a team of girls from that High School.

At the same time a dual debate was held with Detroit. Our negative team, Plummer Snyder, Lewis Van Auken and Paul Mixter defeated the Detroit team. Paul Watzel, John Hermann, and Victor Whittemore of the affirmative team lost at Detroit.

The second debate took place February 9, with Battle Creek. At this time, the affirmative team won and the negative team lost. In the final debate our affirmative team was defeated by Ann Arbor in that city.

On the whole, the year's work has been very successful. More spirit was aroused than in many activities of the school. More students got out for the elimination contests than ever before.

The value of debating to the students is inestimable. Even if one failed to make the team, he was taught how to collect and organize useful material, how to correct fallacies in his own speech and expose them in the speech to his opponents, and how to build up a sound and logical argument. The ability to make a clear, emphatic, and convincing speech is worth much.

The successful debator must be logical. Flowery language may appeal to some, but it counts nothing with a wise judge. It takes thought, clearly and forcibly expressed, to overcome the arguments of the opposing team, in a successful refutation.

Debating teaches a student to pick out the main points of both sides of a question, to form opinions that are worth while, to point out these views to others so that they will see the question as he sees it, and to stick to his opinions until the opposite is proved to him. In other words, debating teaches clear, logical methods of thought. Because of these benefits, it has become an important part in the program of all the best high schools in the country.

THE JUNIOR EXHIBITION

The Junior Ex! What a host of memories the words bring to our minds. How we worked and planned for that event of all events. With what impatience and anxiety we awaited the night that was to decide the dramatic reputation of our class. At last it came. The momentous hour arrived. The curtain rose. The twenty-fifth annual Junior Exhibition had begun. The time flew swiftly by. In all too short a time the curtain fell on the last scene. The strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" died away. Our Junior Ex. was over.

The Junior Exhibition of the Class of 1917 was presented at the Gladmer theatre on March 24, 1916. It was "A Pageant of Peace," written by Miss Mary Derby, who also directed the production. It is in a large measure, to her, that we owe its success.

"A Pageant of Peace" portrayed a striking plea for peace, that was well suited to the war period in which it was presented. The blessings and beauty of peace were brought out in sharp contrast to the horror and violence of war. The leading role of Woman, Peace, was played remarkably well by Ernestine Hall. Howard Donahue, in his presentation of Man, Ambition, won the admiration of his audience. Truth was presented by Francis Bateman in a straightforward manner, excellently well suited to the part. Hugh Shadduck in his portrayal of Self, an unusually difficult role, easily deserved the title of the best actor of the evening. Little Elizabeth Crane as the Future Generation quite captivated the hearts of the audience.

The beautiful scenic and lighting effects added greatly to the success of the Exhibition. One hundred and three characters were represented, making the twenty-fifth Exhibition the largest in the history of Lansing High School.

SENIOR CLASS DAY PLAY

At the Gladmer Theatre on the evening of June 11, 1917, the Class of 1917 gave its last dramatic production. It presented "The Fortune Hunter," by Winchell Smith.

No one could fail to be interested in the experience of shiftless Nat Duncan who went to the little western town to seek his fortune, assumed the role of an industrious, enterprising young man of irreproachable habits, in order to gain favor in the eyes of the eligible young ladies, and then to his surprise found that his assumed character had become his real character. The cast of "The Fortune Hunter" was well chosen with Howard Donahue in the role of Nat Duncan, the fortune hunter, and Mary Burwell as Betty Graham, the druggist's daughter. All the members of the cast were able to do unusually good work. The small town characters which they represented were typical of the people with whom every day life has made us all so familiar.

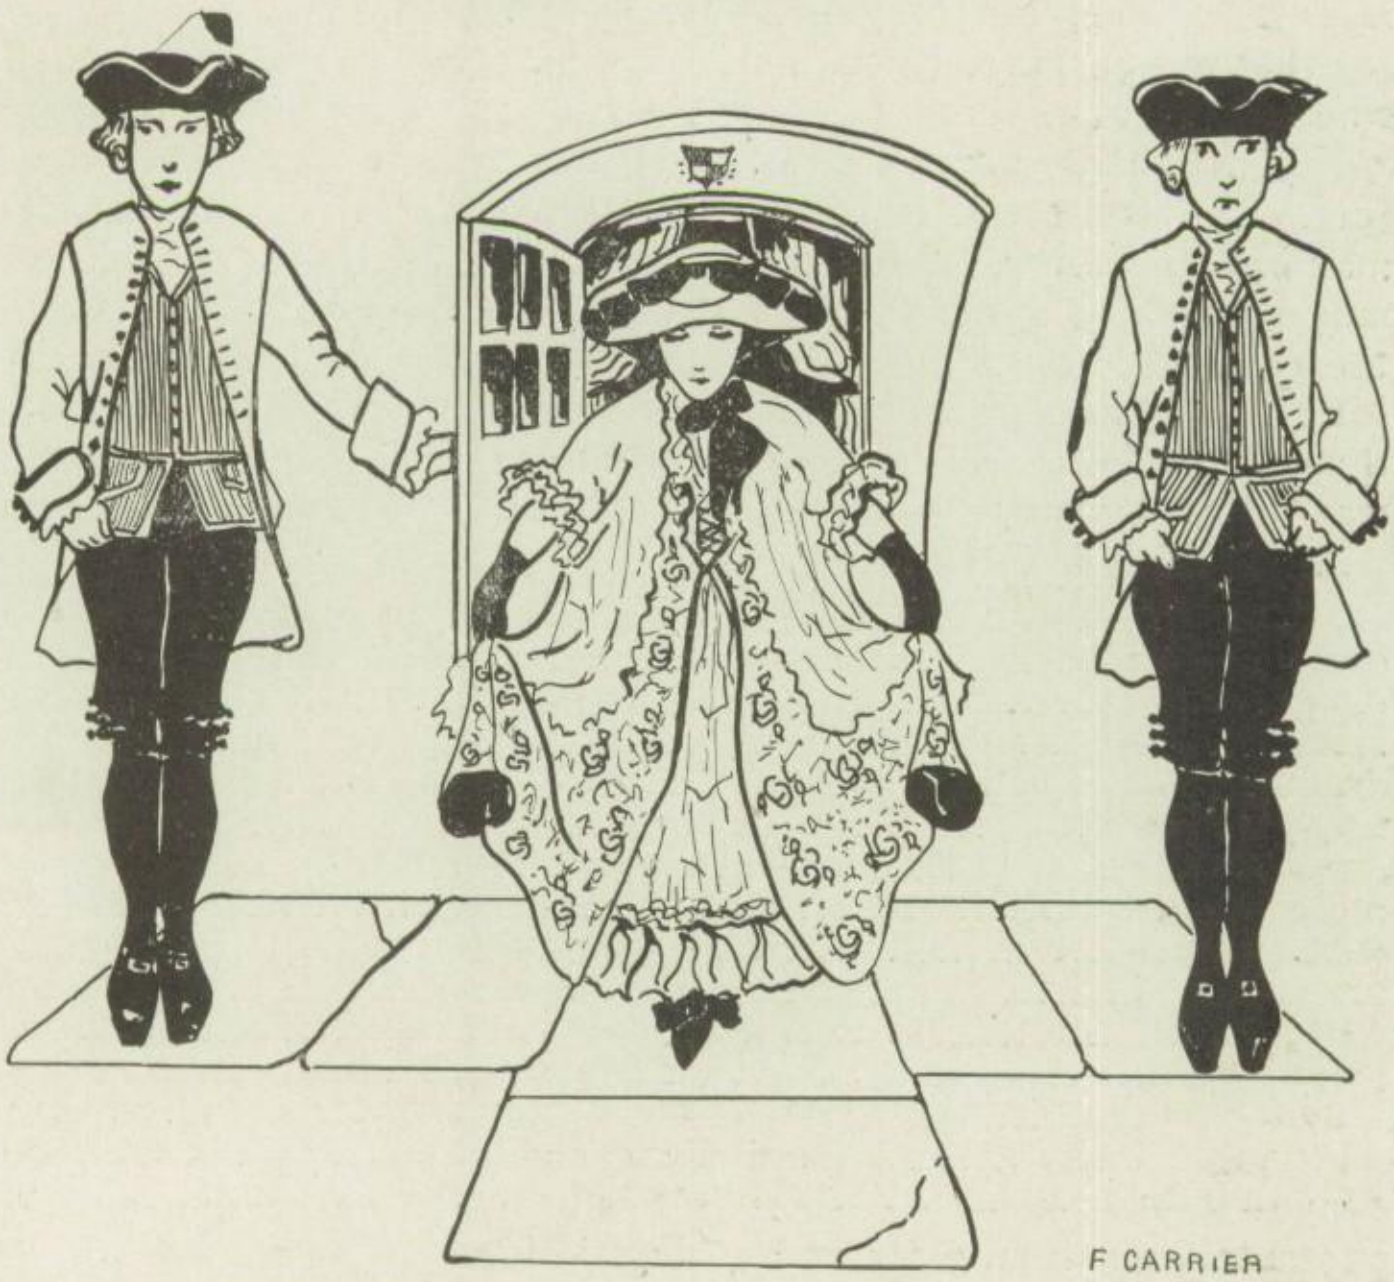
SOCIETY



OUR SOCIAL HISTORY

In September 1913, a large class entered the High School. In due time these students elected officers and were thereafter known as the class of "17". It was in June 1914, that a crowd of self-conscious but hilarious Freshmen gathered together, and made their first attempt to show class spirit. This was at the picnic at Pine Lake. Miss Cole and Miss McCormick had their hands full that day. There was scarcely a person who didn't try to slip away with a few sandwiches, and some even tried to run off with the lemonade.

The next year, '17 again responded to the call of the open and gathered at Pine Lake for the Sophomore picnic. Miss Cole and Miss McCormick again consented to chaperon those "know-it-alls," for thus we had become with an additional year's knowledge. All who went can tell you of the jolly good time they had.

In its third year the class began to show more spirit than before. The first social effort was the Junior Hop, given at the Woman's Club House, March 29, 1916. Logan's Orchestra gave us music, which, to our ears, surpassed all the high priced orchestras of the college "Hops." Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Trachsel and Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Shassberger acted as patrons of the evening. The enthusiasm and class spirit, noticeably absent in previous social events, was in great abundance here. Who can look back upon that night with anything but pleasure?

The Plymouth Congregational Church dining room was filled to overflowing with the members of '17 who, with jest and merry laughter filed in to prove the truth of Owen Meredith's statement,—

"Oh hour of all hours, the most bless'd upon earth, Blessed hour of our dinners."

President Sheldon Higgins presided as toast-master and toasts were given by Mr. Sexton, Miss Florence Hall, Howard Donahue, Priscilla Boyce, Gladys Crane, Lloyd Harris and Howard Root. There was plenty to eat and many hearty laughs.

In June 1916, we held our third annual picnic at Pine Lake. Miss Hall and Miss Seitz acted as chaperons. Sheldon Higgins contributed to our hilarity by falling out of a canoe in the middle of the lake. Maynard Merrill rescued him in his motor boat, and made him presentable with an extra suit of dry clothes. When we were ready to go home, all responded to roll call, to the great relief of the chaperons.

In the early part of the Senior year, the class of 1917 was host to the Freshmen and their parents at the Freshman Reception, given

November 17, 1916 in the high school building. Until eight thirty the faculty received the guests, and at that hour an intertainment was given in the auditorium. There were musical selections by the senior chorus and boys' quartet. President Plummer Snyder gave an address of welcome to the class of "20" and Smith Young responded in behalf of the Freshmen.

One of our last social affairs was the Senior Hop, given in the Club House, on January 27, 1917. Fischer's Student Orchestra of Ann Arbor furnished music full of life and the much desired "pep." Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Sexton and Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Brown were patrons of the evening. It was an evening of happiness and joy from the beginning to the end.

April 20, 1917 marked the conclusion of Seventeen's social life in school. This was the date of the Senior banquet held in the Chamber of Commerce at 6:30 P. M. President Snyder presided as toastmaster and introduced the two speakers of the evening, Mr. B. F. Brown and Miss Emma Lott. After these, extemporaneous speeches were called for. In contrast to other social gatherings, a serious spirit seemed to pervade all, as if the students realized that they were about to leave their high school life for larger fields.

MY HEART'S IN OUR HIGH SCHOOL

Paul Watzel, '17.

My heart's in our High School, my heart is not here,
My heart's in our High School, full of good cheer;
Memories pleasant my young mind shall know,
My heart's in our High School wherever I go.
Farewell to you, High School, I honor your name,
The birthplace of learning, of glory and fame;
Wherever I wander, wherever I rove,
The days of my High School forever I'll love.

Farewell to the rooms where my thoughts e'er will be,
The halls and the corridors—farewell to thee;
Farewell to the hallowed and sacred shrine;
Farewell to the days that will ever be mine;
My heart's in our High School, my heart is not here,
My heart's in our High School, full of good cheer,
Full of sweet memories that ever will grow;
My heart's in our High Shool wherever I go.

DEPARTMENTS

DEPARTMENTS

Not very many years ago the only ideal of education was along academic lines. Professional training alone was taken into account by high schools and colleges. But gradually people came to realize that the business world and the shops also need trained workers. New courses began to be made a part of the high school curriculum. When the Lansing High School was established it had one department, the academic. It now has three, the academic, the commercial, and the vocational.

The academic department has grown stronger every year and has adapted itself to the constantly changing conditions of school life. The object of this course is to give the student a good general education, and to prepare him for further study if he desires it. Our academic department offers work in science, mathematics, English, French, German, Latin, and history. In 1915 there were added the subjects of domestic science, domestic art, and manual training. Three years of English, two and one-half years of mathematics, and one year of science are required for graduation from this department.

The growing demand during the last few years for trained men and women in the business world has made the commercial department of the High School not only an extra advantage, but a necessity. The aim of this course is to give the student training that will fit him for a business life. The commercial subjects are: penmanship, commercial arithmetic, bookkeeping, typewriting, spelling, shorthand, commercial geography, commercial English, commercial law, and political economy. One advantage of such a course taken in the High School, over that taken in a business college, lies in the fact that a student is given the opportunity of a more general education. He may take up subjects which are not in the strictly commercial course. Three years of English are required for graduation from the commercial as well as from the academic department.

Four years ago the vocational department was added to the High School curriculum. It was at first regarded as more or less of an experiment, but it has passed that stage. It is now as firmly established as either of the other departments. The purpose of the industrial co-operative course is to train the boy who wishes to become an efficient artisan. At the same time it gives him the advantages of a high school education. The work in this department is varied according to the individual needs of each boy. Each one is given a chance to study the trade which he wishes to take up. The boys not only learn the theoretical side of the work but they are given practical experience in it. The first year of the course is spent entirely in school. During the other three years one-half of the time is spent in school, one-half in the shop.

ZODIAC REVIEW

The Zodiac, the Lansing High School periodical started by the class of 1902, was rather small during the first years of its publication, but has since developed into a large paper.

It is put out entirely by the student body. The faculty selects two members of the Senior class as candidates for Editor-in-Chief. These names are voted upon by the Senior class and the one elected has charge of the magazine for the year. The Editor is assisted by the members of the staff, who are appointed by the faculty. The class representatives, elected by the various classes, have charge of the distribution of the paper and also supply material from their respective classes. One or more of the faculty advise the staff.

The Zodiac this year was probably the best that has ever been put out. The number of editions was limited to four instead of six as in previous years, but the paper has been larger and has contained several new departments. One of the features has been to have one or more specialties in each edition. The first was "Christmas Gifts," the next, "Valentines," the third, "Remarkable sayings of remarkable people," and the last, "Who's Who."

The current event department was made larger and several other departments have been enlarged and improved. Another of the features was the introduction of cuts which have not appeared for some years.

MUSIC

Music hath charms. There was a time when this could scarcely have been truthfully said of the musical efforts displayed in the Lansing High School. Under the exceedingly capable directorship of Mr. John W. Stephens, the present chorus, glee clubs and orchestra may well command this recognition.

The chorus this year contained two hundred and fifty voices in its two divisions, the glee clubs numbered about forty people, and the orchestra was composed of thirty-five pieces. Each organization has had a definite aim. The chorus worked to improve its own musical ability. It also gave two concerts during the year. The glee clubs did part singing the first semester, and gave a light comic opera, "The Bo'sn's Bride," the second. The orchestra has become probably the most important musical organization in the school. It furnishes music for chapel, for various social affairs, and feels in duty bound to play for all High School functions when called upon.

The year's program began with a winter concert by the chorus, given at the Prudden Auditorium, Sunday afternoon, March 18. The annual May Festival originated in the department of music in the High School, seven years ago. The Festival has grown to include a city Choral Society and Symphony Orchestra under the direction of the High School department. The 1917 May Festival consisted of three concerts. Miss Grace Kerns of New York gave a children's recital in the afternoon of May 24. In the evening the city sixth grade chorus of 600 gave "The Frogs and the Ox." The High School chorus gave a number of Russian, Swedish, and Italian selections with the Symphony Orchestra. On the evening of May 25, the city chorus and glee clubs with three New York soloists, Miss Grace Kerns, Mr. Arthur Middleton, and Mr. John Campbell, accompanied by the Symphony Orchestra, rendered Haydn's "Creation."

THE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

During the last few years, the Athletic Association has become one of the most important factors in High School athletics. It is composed of nearly all the student body, and, through its fees, the expense of athletics is met without aid from the outside.

The students find membership in the Association worth while, because they are able to see all the games by showing their membership cards. The average cost is five cents a game, which is not true in any other school in the state. Because of this system, many attend the games and more school spirit is aroused.

The good work of the Association was shown this spring when its members worked to gain votes for the new gymnasium, which was won by a narrow margin.

The gymnasium will be as well equipped as any in the state. It will have a twenty lap track and will accommodate about forty people on the floor at one time. The swimming pool is to be built so that one can walk entirely around it, which is seldom the case in High School gymnasium pools, because of lack of room. This feature will greatly decrease the danger of any serious accident. Basketball games, track meets, and social functions will be held in the gymnasium.

FOOTBALL SEASON, 1916

Captain .....Sheldon Higgins
Manager .....Lloyd Harris
Coach .....E. J. Shassberger

Lansing ended one of the most successful football seasons in the history of the school, with such a defeat of Jackson, as that school had never before suffered at the hands of any team. Of the eight scheduled games of the season, the local team captured seven, played on the home field, losing the out-of-town game, and rolling up a total of 231 points to their opponents' 34. Three days after the close of the schedule, Detroit Central invited Lansing to play in Detroit. Already out of training, and with little preparation, the local team fought for the state title to the finish, but were left on the circular end of the 27 to 0 score.

To start the season, Coach Shassberger had seven 1915 regulars, two 1915 reserves, and three 1915 second team men. The call for recruits resulted in about 25 new men, from all of the four classes, being added to the above veterans. The largest squad in the history of the school worked out all season. While Lansing had, in the 1916 team, a championship outfit, the peculiar fact must be noted, that no player had had more than one year's experience as an "L" man. There were from two to four men who could hold down each of the eleven stations with almost equal ability. The first line squad carried 20 in its ranks all season. It was the plan of the coach to build for the future while at the same time he was producing a winning team for the present.

The 1917 season should see Lansing, State Champion. With a string of fourteen 1916 "L" men, together with an ample list of Reserves, the prospective team looks like a winner. Coupled with this fact, we play Grand Rapids Central on our own grounds. Every thing points to the very brightest prospects possible, and the Class of 1917 wishes the team unlimited success.

LANSING 34—MT. PLEASANT 0.

The Pleasanters played their card at the very outset of the game; although for a while it looked like a fight such as the Indians, from that town, gave us last year. Lansing easily pushed three touchdowns over during the first half, and two more in the second. Urquhart made two of these, and Hicks, Merchant, and Dunphy, one each.

LANSING 33—FENTON 7.

Although we had a team of mostly substitutes, the Fenton aggregation was unable to register more than one touchdown, and that by the interception of a 50 yard forward pass. Of the five touchdowns by Lansing, one each was made by Urquhart, Cordon Radford, and Dunphy; two, by Hahn.

LANSING 28—BATTLE CREEK 0.

Lansing's first game bearing on the state title ended in an easy defeat of the Food City eleven. This was due largely to the excellent work of Shassberger's formidable line. Merchant, Dunphy, Kipke, and Hahn each scored one touchdown.

LANSING 48—BAY CITY 0.

Bay City Eastern proved too weak in the face of the plays designed by Coach Shassberger for use against Grand Rapids Central. Both the line and backfield displayed their ability widely. Touchdowns were made by Dunphy (4), Moinet (2), Don Graham (1).

GRAND RAPIDS CENTRAL 20—LANSING 0.

Fifty tiring minutes, out of the allotted sixty, were necessary for the husky Uptonites to push over the first touchdown. Both teams were forced to the limit of endurance, when the fatal interception of a Lansing forward pass, gave the Furniture City boys, in four downs, the tally, and courage to round up two more touchdowns, in the last ten minutes, against Lansing's exhaused team. The Oregon plays used by Coach Upton met with little success, as each man on the Capital City team was a star. Pleune, Mindell, and Steketee made the three touchdowns.

LANSING 9—SAGINAW ARTHUR HILL 0.

The Lansing team had not fully recovered from the Grand Rapids battle by the time of the contest with the Hillites. The first three quarters saw the two teams on a par. In the last period, a seemingly impossible field goal by Kipke bounced from the hands of an intercepting Saginaw player and over the bar. That was enough to turn the tide of "pep" all Lansing's way, and Hicks carried the ball over for a touchdown.

LANSING 17— GRAND RAPIDS UNION 7.

The Unionites took Lansing by suprise in the initial rush, and scored a touchdown before the local team could collect its wits. It took little time, however, to recover them and hold the Grand Rapids team. Johns and Graham each scored a touchdown.

LANSING 62—JACKSON 0.

As a fitting revenge for the 27 to 0 defeat in the mud in 1915, Lansing waded through the Jackson line and around the ends mercilessly. Nearly every player of the local aggregation scored a touchdown. These were Don Graham (2), Bishop (2), Moinet (1), Dunphy (1), Kipke (1), Higgins (1), and Siegfried (1).

BASKETBALL SEASON, 1917

Captain .....Sheldon Higgins
Manager .....Harry Lamerson
Coach .....E. L. Snow

Basketball reached a very high pinnacle in Lansing High School this season. The loss of but four of the fifteen games on the schedule, and the total score nearly double that of its opponents, mark a record that no Lansing High basketball team has reached for many years. This success was due largely to the excellent material from which to build a team, and the work of the new Coach, Ernest Snow. The wonderful support given the team must not be disregarded as a big factor also. The right spirit seemed to prevail generally this year, and may its shadow never grow less.

Contrary to expectations, the loss of Pierce, Lewis, Twiss and Moliter did not affect this year's team much, as Higgins, Gilkey, Palm, McCann and Goodell were left to build around. Added to these were the two lanky East Lansing stars, Foster and Abbott, also Lane, and the Freshman member of the Graham family. Every one of these men proved his ability in his particular position. Gilkey was the star point winner of the team scoring over two hundred of the total number. Coach Snow was very fortunate in having such a crew of basketeers.

The first five games of the schedule proved easy going for the Lansing team, the biggest score being with Grand Ledge, 94 to 9. Never, in the past seven years of our attempts to conquer Grand Rapids Central in athletics, were better efforts made than at the next game on the schedule, with that school. The lucky streak of the Furniture City outfit seemed broken at the end of the allotted time when the score was tied, but a Lansing foul, in the five minutes over time, left Lansing the possessor of only 28 of the 57 points recorded.

Jackson surprised the State by trouncing Lansing by 10 points, since it was her first game won that season. A victory over Bay City Eastern was sandwiched between this defeat and a second defeat at the hands of Grand Rapids Central. The next four games ended in Lansing's favor.

The season ended at the First Annual Interscholastic Basketball tournament at Ann Arbor, where some three dozen schools over the State competed for the cup. The Lansing team easily eliminated St. Louis High the first day, but again tasted defeat by Grand Rapids Central on the day following.

Graduation means the loss of Captain Higgins, Palm, and Foster, but there will be left some excellent material with which to build a winning team in 1918. Very good basketball ability was shown by the second team men, especially a few small Freshmen. These look promising for the future, and next year's prospects seem very bright when we consider that, for the first time in many years, we will probably have the same coach a second season.

INDOOR TRACK SEASON, 1917

Captain .....Herbert Dunphy
Manager .....Edmund Johns
Coach .....E. J. Shassberger

This year's indoor Track Team met with only moderate success. This was due to three causes. First, as has always been the condition in the past, facilities were very bad for practice. Second, the track material that certainly must exist in a school of nine hundred pupils, was not brought to the surface. Third, the student body seemed loath to give its support to the team. All things considered, the Coach did the best possible with the outfit.

In a dual meet with Battle Creek, Lansing managed to crawl out with the margin of 6 points on the 41 1-2 to 35 1-2 score. This was due to the work of the relay team composed of Hamilton, Hahn, Dunphy, and Carlton Radford.

The Lansing team was smothered at Detroit by Central High by a 75 1-2 to 4 1-2 count. These 4 1-2 points were made by Captain Dunphy, Kipke and Hamilton. This score showed the superiority of a team trained under adequate facilities, over one trained otherwise.

The future begins to look more cheerful, and the next year or so ought to show the state that Lansing has a winning track team. This will be the result of the decision of the people of Lansing, which is soon to make the ancient dream of a gymnasium come true.

OUTDOOR TRACK SEASON, 1917

Although the Outdoor Track Team this season brought no victory for Lansing, the results were promising, if we consider the fact that nearly all athletics were injured by the general disturbed state of the nation. Interest and the usual enthusiasm seemed to be lacking for this branch of sports in Lansing.

It is unjust to say that the loss of six men from the 1916 squad affected this year's team, as Captain Dunphy, the Radford twins, Beltz, Hamilton, Bishop and the Freshman star, Kipke, did well in the three meets in which they took part.

Lansing placed third in the Kalamazoo College meet, May 5, with 16 points. This probably was the best showing of the season.

Two weeks later the Kalamazoo Normal meet left Lansing in sixth place with 15 1-2 points, a poor showing for a school of our size.

The Annual Interscholastic meet at M. A. C., held May 25 and 26, two weeks earlier than in previous years, was handicapped considerably on the second day by a healthy hail and rain storm, so that the contestants were unable to show much form. Lansing finished fifth, scoring 12 1-2 points with Grand Rapids winning the meet, as it did in 1916.

BASEBALL SEASON, 1917

Captain .....Lloyd Harris
Coach .....H. B. McKale

Baseball this season was given a rather hard blow. Coach McKale was able to schedule but five games. This was due to the unsettled state of athlethics caused by the war,—many schools of the State having no baseball teams this year. Of these five games, Lansing won three. They were games devoid, to a great extent, of the usual pep, which showed the lack of interest in baseball in the school.

This year's team seemed below the standard of many previous L. H. S. teams, but it was due to the fact that it was inexperienced. Plenty of training and practice is necessary for a successful team. This was lacking among "Mac's" men. About one half of the squad was entirely new, and not one of the veterans had played three years before this one. Nevertheless the season should not be looked upon as a failure.

Coach McKale will lose Captain Harris, Higgins, Foster, and Bishop for next year. However, he will have H. Graham, Gill, and Hagamier of two years experience, besides the new members of the first and second teams who are in general from the lower classes and have shown up well. Among these latter are Stallings, Glogofsky, Kipke, Urquhart, D. Graham, Messenger, Buckingham, Dane, and Gilkey. With this bunch to build from, the prospects appear encouraging for next year.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS

"The quality of mercy is not strained," but that which we get from our teachers seems to be watered.

As we of the Senior Class leave this school, we are overjoyed that it is our pleasure to witness the erection of an addition to our high school. We hope that the good work will continue and not be hindered by the war.

Because of the stupendous increase in the price of raw materials for making paper, ink, type, and electricity, due to the fact that all pecuniarily selfish minds are saving their coin for the higher prices of foodstuffs and gasoline, this edition was necessarily curtailed in order to maintain the old subscription rate, which is public appreciation.

CONCERNING OUR AUTHORS

The new book published by Miss Dorothy Hermann gives a very interesting and beneficial treatise on the value of height in the every day life of a woman. For instance she depicts an auction sale and shows to the best advantage the bargains gained with this quality. The book is "Essays on Inches." $1.25 net.

Another volume of interest is one called "The Value of Zeros" by Maebelle Vreeland. This explains the value of zeros better than any previous publication. She dwells especially on the importance of two zeros after the figure one.

QUOTATIONS FROM SHADDUCK'S BOOK, "THE LOST ART OF STUDYING."

I would rather spend ten minutes at the edge of a book, than dwell in a seventh heaven forever.

Oh, ye of little wisdom, the time will come when there will be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

An honest student is the noblest work of God.

There is an isle of rest for thee, but I am blown along a wandering wind in search of knowledge.

To thine own teacher be true, then canst thou not be false to any man.

This is no true knowledge which the mind can hold; he simply whiles away his time, who studies from a sense of duty.

Judge—"What's the charge against this man?"

Officer—"Y'onner, he stole a pair of pants."

Judge—"Dismissed! You can't make a suit out of a pair of pants."

A future voter in civics class had just pulled a "bonehead." A girl was called on and the question answered correctly. It was then that McKale, with solemn tone and perfectly straight face, said, "More and more I'm getting to believe in woman suffrage."

SOME STORIES WITH IMPOSSIBLE ENDINGS

The day was warm and there wasn't one person in ten that was studying. The place was in the auditorium, and the time was Friday, seventh hour; the girl came in from the north door and very accidently turned her pocket-book upside down. There was a metallic sound as the money struck the floor, but—not a single person in the whole room shuffled his feet.

* * * * *

Nobody was paying any attention to the youthful chemist as he tried to pour water into a large bottle of concentrated sulphuric acid, to see what it would do. The first thing that attracted them was a rather sputtering sound, a shrill and painful cry and a crash as the bottle of heavy acid dashed to the floor. Everyone was in a commotion, but when the affair was all over, Trachsel said sweetly, "Well, never mind, there's more acid where that came from, and we can easily get the board of education to donate enough money to fix the floor, so you won't fall into Physics lab."

* * * * *

For a while I doubted whether I would receive a satisfactory mark in Junior English. I had done fairly well and ought to at least get a G. No, I had failed in my last two tests, my mark would probably be nearer C; I would consider myself lucky if I got M. With these thoughts in my mind I handed in my card and received it back in a short time from Miss Seitz with a nice looking A marked upon it.

* * * * *

Mr. Gardner was having a class in geometry when the door burst suddenly open and an excited student rushed in, crossed the room noisily to his desk and proceeded to hunt for a forgotten book. At last he found it and started to make his way toward the door, he stumbled and a titter went up from the disturbed class; he dropped his pencil, and had to crowd under a seat to get it; finally he reached the door and as he did so he caught the eye of the teacher —Mr. Gardner smiled.

* * * * *

It was a football game of the best type. Both teams were fighting their hardest, when Captain Higgins suddenly threw down his head-gear and cried, "Aw, what's the use? We're beat anyway, let's let 'm have it." And every single member of the team and every single rooter agreed.

* * * * *

A student took his book down to Hammond's, thinking he could realize enough on it to go half way toward a Friday night's entertainment. Mr. Bishop explained, "This book, when new, was worth 70c, now the price of paper has gone up so that we would not think of giving you any less than a dollar and a quarter for it."

OUR SENIOR VAUDEVILLE ACT

Mr. X—Hurrah!

Miss Y—What's the matter now?

Mr. X—I heard it said today that the High School is going to have a gym.

Miss Y—I hope it isn't a Frost this time.

Mr. Z—Maybe it isn't, but that is still to be Schuon.

Miss Y—Are you sure that the person who told you wasn't joking?

Mr. X—No, he seemed to be in earnest.

Mr. Z—Maybe he was a—a sort of a musical instrument.

Miss Y—You mean a lyre?

Mr. Z—That's it. I'll tell you what we are going to get.

Miss Y—What's that?

Mr. Z—The baseball players are going to get some new Beltz.

Mr. X—Well they need some Moore.

Miss Y—What we need in this school is a Gunn club.

Mr. Z—Or else an archer's club, some sort of a Shaft-man's club, you know.

Mr. X—Well, if we had an empire organized, we've have the King.

Miss Y—Wouldn't that be great.

Mr. Z—We ought to have more contests between the students, don't you think?

MissY—What kind of a contest would you suggest?

Mr. X—I think an Eaton contest would be novel.

Mr. Z—That would be good. Have 'em eat Lyons, eh?

Miss Y—I think the Boyce in this school wouldn't give the others a chance.

Mr. X—What do you think of this vocational course?

Mr. Z—I think it's fine.

Miss Y—Glorious.

Mr. X—But I think it's unnecessary.

Miss Y—Why?

Mr. X—Why? Because we have a number of tradesmen in our class. We have a Plummer, a Smith, a Carpenter———

Miss Y—And a Snyder—oh, beg your pardon, I meant a Taylor. You see, I'm taking up German and I'm so apt to get twisted. Snyder is the German for Taylor.

Mr. Z—Well, never mind, we seem to have them both.

Miss Y—We have some automobiles, too.

Mr. X—All right, spring it.

Miss Y—Well, there is the Haynes and we only lack the last syllable of the Pierce-Arrow.

Mr. X—Isn't that a shame;—we couldn't call it the Pierce-Shaft, could we,—it would mean the same thing.

Miss Y—No, you couldn't Weld 'em together that way.

Mr. X—Maybe it was a little bad; I never thought of that.

Miss Y—We have got some good Nichols, though.

Mr. Z—Pure Nickel, too.

Mr. X—You'd better go south with that one.

Mr. Z—You mean North.

Miss Y—I guess that'll be about all for awhile, we've earned our money.

There has appeared on the market a book which has created a widespread disturbance in medical circles. The book is called "An Entirely Candid Opinion of the Activities of the Board of Health," and its author is H. B. McKale. The author, being unprejudiced, is in the best position to give an entirely fair and unbiased criticism of the work, which our efficient board is doing. The author especially commends the work done by the board during the terrible scarlet fever epidemic which visited our city this winter. However, the author believes that the board was not strict enough in its quarantine regulations and advocates more rigid and stricter rules to regulate the period of imprisonment. Among other things, Mr. McKale advocates the lengthening the time now prescribed to at least eight weeks and to make it necessary for the patient to peal twice before being set again at liberty. To quote from the author himself: "The board has done excellent work and we greatly appreciate the effort which they made to stamp out the dreaded disease which claims many American lives every year. We should give a vote of thanks to the board, but at the same time remember that even more stringent quarantine laws should and ought to be enforced. I am heartily in favor of a law which should require the patient to take an extended trip through purgatory to make sure that he pealed according to the manner prescribed by law."
